Objective of the Seminar

Life sciences are pure and applied sciences concerned with the structure and behaviour of living organisms including their organisation, life processes and relationships to each other and their environment. Life sciences deal with the scientific study of various live forms which implies enormous applications to human beings. The life sciences are helpful in improving the quality and standard of life to a greater extent and they have applications in vermiculture, apiculture, sericulture, agriculture, health, medicine and food science industries. Hence through this seminar an effort is made to sensitise the imperative need to revive the value of life science in young minds.
